INTERMOUNTAIN DEVELOPMENT

THE REMARKABLE record of government land sales and entries reported from Washington in yesterday's Herald will come as a surprise to those who have not been watching the influx of immigration into Idaho, Wyoming and some parts of Utah. Utah's showing is naturally small because the amount of arable land remaining unclaimed in this state is limited. In Wyoming and Idaho, however, the prospect of irrigation ditches reclaiming immense tracts of land hitherto without water has brought into settlement an area incomprehensible to average residents of the cities.

Wyoming's cash receipts, fees and commissions for the land office amounted to over $300,000, an increase of more than $100,000 over the total of the previous year. Entries embraced upward of 2,000,000 acres, an increase of over half a million. Idaho's cash receipts were a little over $700,000, or more than double those of the preceding year.

Idaho has the advantage in one respect over her neighbors because she has large tracts of first-class timber land which are just beginning to be appreciated. Her wealth in this one item is enormous, and the next few years will see a development of timber resources in Idaho that will contribute enormously to the growth of the state.

These additions to the general land fund have an important bearing on the future of the government's irrigation projects in the west, since the funds in this department are to be used largely for assistance in reservoir undertakings, and the amount of money available will determine the extent to which government aid can be extended to the so-called arid states. Moreover, these sales show, as nothing else can, the rapidity with which the west is being settled up.

The class of settlers moving in is a matter of congratulation, since they make most desirable citizens and would be welcome anywhere.

With the impetus they will give to industry in the mountain states, and with the railroad development already under way, it is safe to predict that the next decade will witness remarkable progress in the great region between the Rockies and Sierras and stretching from the Colorado river to the Canadian border.

No other territory in the United States has greater natural resources, none has had so few opportunities and facilities for development, and none has a better outlook for the immediate future.

THE GRAND ARMY.

THE MARCH of the Grand Army at its annual reunions is the most inspiring and pathetic spectacle of our national life. Weakened by age and infirmity, many of them poor, all within a very few years of the last recall, they still keep time to great memories as they march and offer a greater lesson in patriotism than any historian ever told or poet sung.

To the generation of today, the war in which these men fought seems very far away. Their deeds of heroism, their suffering and sacrifice, have almost been forgotten in a struggle for sordid success. Grant and Sherman and Sheridan are still great figures in the minds of men, but they, too, are fast taking a place with the heroes of another day, so swiftly does time move, so soon is the past replaced.

But, as one reads of the Grand Army, of the stories recounted, and hears again the names of famous leaders and battles, the story of the great war becomes fresh again. Its lessons of patriotism, of self-sacrifice, of bravery, are brought home to the men and women of today as they could be in no other way.

The Grand Army is fast coming to the close of its weary life battle; its memory, ought to and will be perpetuated forever by the men who come after, the men who reap the fruits of the victory that army won.

HARD TO EXPLAIN.

DETECTIVE William Marsden of Chicago will have some elaborate explaining to do when he gets back to his place among the incredulous sleuths of the Illinois metropolis. Marsden told the Associated Press, according to a telegram from Cheyenne published yesterday, about the wonderful escape of a prisoner he was taking back to Chicago from Rawlins, Wyoming. The only possible hope Marsden has to secure belief in his story is on the theory that truth is stranger than fiction.

He says that he had his man shackled to a seat in a chair car when sleep overcame him (the detective) and he dozed off. While he slept the shackled prisoner, shackled, mind you, conceived the notion that he would like to get away. Accordingly, in spite of his shackles, the shackles that bound him securely to the seat, he carefully searched the pockets of the officer until he found the key to the shackles aforesaid. Then he unlocked the shackles and freed himself.

That would seem to be enough of a stunt for any ordinary prisoner to perform, but Marsden's man was still unsatisfied. With the justly celebrated shackles that had shackled him, he shackled the officer, fastening him to the steam pipes that run along both sides of modern passenger cars. Throughout the performance the detective slept the sleep of the pure at heart. He never so much as stirred until the train reached Cheyenne, a hundred miles and more away. In the meanwhile the prisoner who, to make the story complete, should have remained to jail his captor, had stepped off the train at Laramie.

Now, Marsden may be able to persuade his fellow officers in Chicago that the thing happened exactly as he says it happened, but we have our doubts. They are likely to ask how it was possible for a shackled man to deftly search the pockets of another man; how, with the shackles on him, he was able to use a key and unlock the aforesaid shackles; why, with freedom within his grasp, he waited to shackle the detective to the steam pipes in the car, thus taking the grave risk of recapture involved in the probability of awakening the detective during the latter operation?

The Chicago detectives, who have been known to see through a grindstone, when the said grindstone had a hole in it, will be pardoned if they doubt the story. So will ordinary citizens be pardoned for skepticism. Yet, surely it is not possible that Mr. Marsden was "approached" before the prisoner began his work?

AN EXAMPLE NEEDED.

THE discoveries made by Fire Chief Devine during the course of his investigation in regard to the storing of explosives in Salt Lake City are, to state the case mildly, rather startling. The chief through his agents has learned that little or no attention has been paid by Salt Lake dealers to the ordinance limiting the amount of explosives to be kept at one time in their places of business. In the business district he found the legal maximum exceeded many times.

Salt Lake differs from most cities in this business of explosives in that very many more of them are handled here than in other cities of relatively the same size. Large orders are constantly coming in from the mining camps and frequently it is necessary to fill them with the greatest possible dispatch. It is often very inconvenient to send out to the magazines for powder, dynamite, caps and other explosives for "rush" orders and the dealers have therefore grown careless.

Instead of obeying the strict letter of the law they have allowed explosives to accumulate in their houses so as to be able to fill orders of almost any size at a moment's notice. It is high time the practice was stopped. The convenience of dealers and customers is worth considering, of course, but it cannot be deferred to when a question of public safety is involved. Chief Devine's report shows that in several of Salt Lake's most prominent buildings, some of them being used for offices as well as for business purposes, enough explosives are stored to blow the structures to atoms without a moment's warning.

There would be no time for the tenants to save their lives or their chattels in the event of an explosion. Great care is used, naturally enough, by the dealers in handling their dynamite, powder, caps and cartridges, but it is impossible to absolutely eliminate the danger of an explosion. Besides, familiarity with explosives is all too apt to breed contempt for them and in the twinkling of an eye a great catastrophe is brought about.

The safest way both for dealers and public, is for the former to observe the law strictly. Those who do not should be punished severely. The ordinance provides that the guilty ones may be fined in any sum not exceeding $100 or imprisoned for a period not exceeding 100 days or both fine and imprisonment may be imposed. Let Chief Devine proceed to make an example out of somebody at once.

A copy of the first number of the Bulletin of the University of Utah has reached The Herald. Its successors deal it in point of interest and general excellence, the Bulletin, which is to be issued quarterly, will meet with high favor in a wide circle of readers. The first number is given over almost entirely to handsome half-tone pictures of the buildings and grounds of the university, with numerous interior views showing classes at work in the various grades.

A Kentucky woman shot and seriously wounded her brother, whom she mistook for a burglar. Another case of the irony of fate. If the brother had really been a burglar the chances are that the woman would have missed him about a mile.

A Chinese cruiser came into collision with a passenger steamer the other night and promptly went to the bottom. This would seem to indicate that the Chinese must have converted a lot of tin cans into alleged fighting ships.

The Rawlins officer who killed a convict when the latter tried to escape deserves a medal. If there were more such officers there would be fewer attempts by convicts to escape from confinement.

Perhaps Superintendent Read is going to install that trolley parcel delivery line in order to prevent citizens from making delivery boys out of his conductors. There is an industry that really has been overdone.

According to the testimony of one of the Missouri baking powder men, it wasn't much trouble to get the senators to rise to any kind of proposition. If he considers this testimonial, he is welcome.

We feel to concur in the hanging of Convict Armstrong by Convict Armstrong in the Colorado penitentiary. At last that desperate individual has done something for his country.

Even the "unlucky efforts" of Senator T. Kearns, who was a guest of Sir Thomas Lipton on the Erin yesterday, failed to produce a breeze of sufficient strength to make a yacht race.

The first race between Reliance and Shamrock III was a drifting match. It does seem that with all the money back of those races it should be possible to "raise the wind."

SPARKS

When the poetry microbe strikes a place, trouble is sure to ensue. Witness the following by the society editor:

There's a man in Salt Lake society Who causes his friends much anxiety; He comes home very far from sobriety, Achieving much bad notoriety. Evidencing great lack of piety And causing his poor wife to cry at he.

The sporting editor emptied his pipe eight times while he was dashing off this:

The player wot his knotted hands And wickedly smashed the sphere; He started around the bases four, While there rang out cheer on cheer. "Oh, joy!" all the people shouted, "It's a four-base hit, by gravity!" But out away in the middle field, A player ensnared the ball.

The city editor, never too busy to release a bit of choice and seasonable sentiment, turned in this:

Oh, the rain, the beautiful rain, Filling the earth and the house tops being low.

The advertising man came in and left the following:

(Air, "Take of a Bumble Bee.") Oh, good people all, I've a message for you; I want to tell you kindly what you really ought to do—

There'll be moss on your back and tears in your eyes If you don't wake up forthwith and freely advertise.

The janitor became affected and registered his kick thus:

Of troubles in this building the janitor has the most; He 'ways does his very best and ever scorns to be a slave. Of what he does to make things go. He's busy day and night. Cleaning up the premises and setting wrong things right.

And it seems to him the brainiest could work to beat the band. Without getting paper three feet deep upon the office floor.

The chief editorial writer believes this the best thing he ever wrote. Everyone else knows it's the truest thing he ever wrote:

I wrinkle up my brow a while and then I write a line. And then I bend my brow again and that's a very good sign. There'll be some editorial if I can think of another line.

The police reporter poured out his heart in the following touching lines:

Oh, I look at vags and I look at rags, Till I feel as ragged as thunder. I mix with the cops and I write up the "news" Till I sometimes think it's a wonder. With the things I do and the things I see.

My wits are not all gone. I see the drunks in the lock-up bunks. Shouting to beat the band. And I dream of thugs and I dream of jugs.

But I have to be on hand Each day at three and it's up to me To cover the run till dawn. When I have the time and I have the dime.

I hit the street lunch wagon; I have five more minutes to spare. Which hides the foaming flagon. Oh, my work is rough and my friends are tough.

And my life's not song and laughter. With crime to detect, I cannot reflect. On the decent things of life. No time to rest, no moment's bliss. To think of home or a wife.

My career is such I can't hope for much. When I move to the hereafter.

The telegraph editor welcomed the opportunity to tell what he thinks of the Associated Press in these lines:

I sit here at my desk all night, And weep and shiver and swear At the awful bores and the foolishness of it. That comes from everywhere. My desk is nearly hidden By the rubbish of it. And out of thirty miles of stuff I get a foot of news.

And this came from the man behind the checks:

There's plenty of slop turned out in the shop. But it's my work makes the hit. The man with the pen and the man with the mop. All hands appreciate it. I don't write much, but the magic touch Of my pen makes faces bright. A case of no cash means a case of no hash.

So they welcome the stuff I write. I work once a week, but all hands speak Of me but to extol; I'm the main larder of the whole kibosh. For I edit the glad payroll.

SOCIETY

Mrs. Hal Brown was the hostess yesterday afternoon at a very delightful Kensington given in honor of her guest, Mrs. Jacobs of Seattle. About thirty ladies were present, and besides the customary work of a Kensington they enjoyed an impromptu programme of music and readings given by Miss Butler, Miss Edna Jacobs and Mrs. John Reed. Mrs. Brown was assisted by Mrs. George Putnam, Mrs. J. G. Jacobs, Mrs. S. Lincoln Boggs and Miss Jacobs.

Another enjoyable event of yesterday was the Kensington given by Miss Gertrude Meyer in honor of her cousin, Miss Lily Mayer of Chicago, who is her guest. About thirty young girls enjoyed the afternoon, putting in the hours in chatting and sewing. The home was most prettily decorated in palms and shaded lights, and a number of musical and literary selections were enjoyed.

Mrs. N. B. Yankey of Web City, Mo., is the guest of Mrs. R. C. Cordell of 131 Eighth East street.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Archer gave a delightfully informal musicale last evening in honor of Mr. Edie, a well known young musician of Denver.

Mrs. Edward Meyer is expected home shortly from the canyons, where she has spent the warm weather.

Mrs. Jungk entertains this afternoon in honor of Mrs. Robert Brewer of a case, who is on her way home from the Yellowstone.

Misses Margaret and Agnes Ryan leave next week for Notre Dame, Ind., where they will enter school.

A merry party of young people enjoyed a hay ride last evening after the rain, given by Miss Jessie Home.

The Ladies' Missionary society of the First Presbyterian church will entertain the teachers who are in attendance at the convention at a reception in the church parlors tomorrow evening.

Mrs. Reinberger and her little daughter and Mr. Forest Burrows are visiting their aunt, Mrs. J. D. Adams.

Miss Martha Kelly of Park City, who has been visiting Miss Lulu Sloan, left yesterday to visit relatives in Ogden.

Mrs. Sinclair and Miss Sinclair entertained again last evening at cards.

Mrs. William Igleheart and her sons are home from an outing of several weeks in Cascade canyon, Colorado.

Mrs. J. M. Moore will entertain a party of friends at a picnic this evening at Liberty park, the event being in honor of her niece, Miss Butler of St. Joseph.

Mrs. J. D. Owen is still at Brighton, but will return about the last of the week.

Mrs. P. J. O'Meara entertained about a dozen ladies at a very elaborately appointed luncheon yesterday.

Miss Gertrude Romney, Marian McEwan and Renee Service gave a delightful birthday party to their many young friends at Wasatch resort on Wednesday afternoon. The affair took place at the upper camp, which was prettily decorated with ferns, evergreens and wild flowers. Dainty refreshments were served and all present voted the affair a huge success.

Is An Egotist. (Chicago Chronicle.)

Senator Platt was in rather a spiteful mood the other day—a frame of mind quite unusual with the New York statesman. During a conversation with a reporter he fell to talking of a certain politician who has rather a good opinion of himself. "To land him, bait your hook with flattery," said the senator. He is an egotist. His worst enemy, by praising the cut of his coat, the architecture of his house, his skill at steering a boat or making a speech, his grace in lifting his hat to a woman—his worst enemy by praising him, is sure to make him a fool. Yes, the senator concluded, "he is an egotist; a man who would be glad to die for the pleasure of looking up from his grave and reading the stonecutter's puff on his tombstone."
